INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

WHEN the present translation of Neander's Church History was revised and published in its new form in 1872, the original indexes, which were found to be quite defective, were carefully corrected and enlarged. The result, however, was even then seen to be insufficient for all the purposes of reference, and at length, through the liberality of the publishers, a single index is now offered to the public, which includes, not only the general contents of the volumes, but also an analytical list of the citations from Christian and Pagan authors found in the notes, as well as the citations from Scripture scattered through the work. This is but the completion of a plan already partly carried out in the first volume, doubtless under the direction of Neander.

The citations are some of them from works, whether published volumes or manuscripts, which are not to be found in this country, and it is believed that the means of introduction to the great writers on Theology, and to many of the records of the Christian Church, which these valuable notes afford, are increased by the careful classification of the passages cited, under the names of the authors and their works, and, so far as possible, in the order in which they occur in those works. It has been attempted, with what success the reader must judge, to suggest by a brief hint the subject of many of these citations, and thus the drift and tenor of the writings referred to may often be inferred at a glance. To avoid confusion, this portion of the index has been printed in smaller type than the rest.

The main body of the index contains, perhaps, a third more references than those hitherto published, and these have also been arranged with much care according to the nature of the subject. In some cases they are divided by the Periods to which they belong, into paragraphs; or, where the subject appertains chiefly to some one Period or volume, the plan usually followed has been to give first the topics that would best introduce the subject, and to add the rest in the order of the pages. Under the word Tertullian, for example, the first three references enable the reader to turn at once to those passages which give the most general sketch of his life and character. Then follow all the allusions to him or his writings, as they occur in the course of the work. In most cases, it is thought, the principle of arrangement will be readily perceived.

The number of the volume is not generally given a second time in the same paragraph, unless some other volume has been referred to.

It is, perhaps, impossible that, among so many references, there should not occur here and there a mistake, even after repeated revision and verification, but it is hoped that these will be found to be few in proportion to the whole, and that the result of this new effort to render the work more complete in its appointments may prove a real addition to its practical value.

Most of the abbreviations employed in the ensuing pages will be easily understood. A list of the more common is as follows:—
